

As a Finance major at the University of Missouri, I've developed a deep understanding of how economic systems function and how financial decisions shape the world we live in. What interests me most is how those same decisions are influenced by the laws and policies created at the state level. I'm pursuing a career in corporate law, and I see the legislative environment as the place where finance and law intersect most clearly. Working in a state office offers the opportunity to apply my analytical background while gaining firsthand experience with how policy becomes practice.

My coursework in finance and banking has given me the ability to evaluate complex systems, interpret data, and make decisions based on logic and evidence. I've studied how organizations manage capital, balance risk, and pursue growth, but I've also learned that these choices depend heavily on the legal and regulatory framework that guides them. This opportunity will allow me to see that connection up close, to understand how legislation directly affects the economic and business environment I will one day work in. Experiencing the policymaking process from within will give me valuable perspective that I can carry into law school and, ultimately, into a career that bridges the gap between financial decision-making and responsible legal guidance.

Beyond academics, I've built a strong record of leadership and service that reflects my reliability, communication skills, and ability to get things done efficiently. As Homecoming Head Liaison, I've coordinated large campus projects, managed multiple teams under tight deadlines, and ensured that tasks were completed accurately and on time. Those experiences strengthened my ability to collaborate, balance competing priorities, and think strategically, skills that translate directly to a legislative environment where teamwork and attention to detail are essential. Through Tau Kappa Epsilon, I've strengthened my collaboration skills and learned how to work effectively within a team to achieve shared goals. My volunteer work at the Cedar Creek Therapeutic Riding Center and my service trip to Jamaica taught me the importance of hard work, humility, and leading by example, values that I bring to every responsibility I take on.

I bring an analytical mindset, attention to detail, and a strong work ethic to everything I do. I'm eager to contribute meaningfully to a legislative office, offering professionalism, dependability, and a drive to make a positive impact on the state of Missouri.
