

Hi!

My name is Luke Steyer and I am a freshman at Mizzou. Despite all the troubles that follow me (mainly laziness; missing deadlines) I always have this singular mission in mind: serving other people. I feel this drive for service has brought me to the state capitol itself. I feel an enormous pride and I always (try to, at least) count my blessings for the opportunities that are given to me in this life. If great things are given, great things are expected. This mantra has always followed me ever since I read it, and I feel like even being in an auxiliary role in the state capitol can fulfill this urge inside of me.

There is some baggage that I bring with me, however: I am not the best with remembering things and I loathe schedules—probably the worst trait to have! But I do want to make this clear: I am a quick learner, a problem solver, and I always strive to be a light to everyone on a dark and dreary day. I also like reading into anything government related and I love analyzing problems from a high-up view, perfect for dissecting whatever high-filitant policy ideas which sneak their way into the state capitol. Whatever you want, I'll read it! Whatever it is, I'll find it interesting!

I hope you take the time to consider my application even despite its faults (I'm not the most flashy writer!). I may have some defects but I have a passion—a true one, I feel—to serve others. I hope you can see that just through this small little blurb about me, and recruit me to your office!
